The AMF, AFG and SFAF provide small and mid-sized companies keys to financial reporting that meets market's expectations

Financial reporting is a market-visibility issue for small and mid-sized companies. That is why the AMF (French financial markets authority), AFG (French financial management association) and SFAF (French society of financial analysts) have compiled a few 'keys' to help mid-caps better understand and meet the expectations of financial analysts and institutional investors.

Financial and extra-financial reporting for small and mid-sized companies remains a difficult subject to address, owing to the difference in companies’ maturity. Still, it is a visibility and credibility issue with regard to the market. It is therefore essential for listed companies to appropriate rules that allow for a long-term communication and thereby benefit from market confidence.

To better support small and mid-sized companies to acquire this knowledge, the AMF, AFG and SFAF have prepared a single document that includes:

— guidelines from the regulatory framework (exact, accurate and true nature of the information; its consistency over time. equality of information between investors; and prompt disclosure of inside information);

— expectations of analysts and asset managers in terms of disclosure; and

The AMF, AFG and SFAF provide small and mid-sized companies keys to financial reporting that meets market's expectations.

In summary, this document recalls that the regularity and quality of information are essential. This regularity is a key factor in winning and keeping investor confidence. Listed companies should bear in mind the importance of building their reputation over time. Being able to explain its objectives and be credible, respect its commitments to the market and keep a clear and stable speech are the keys to clear communication.

About the AMF
