The AMF awards its 2022 prize for young researchers in economics

The AMF launched the Young Researcher Award in 2015 to support academic research on topics related to regulation and the financial markets. The AMF prize rewards two researchers this year: Hava Orkut, Associate Professor in Finance at EM Strasbourg Business School, and Noémie Pinardon-Touati, Assistant Professor in the Economics Department at Columbia University.

This year, the Scientific Advisory Board of the Autorité des marchés financiers awards its young researcher prize in economics to two different personalities: Hava Orkut, for her work on behavioral finance, and Noémie Pinardon-Touati, whose research focuses on financial intermediation and corporate finance.

The AMF prize rewards the work of researchers under the age of 35 on economic and financial topics of interest to market regulators with the objective of encouraging further research in this area.

Hava Orkut is Associate Professor of finance at EM Strasbourg Business School. She obtained her PhD in Management Sciences from the University of Strasbourg in 2018. Her research area is behavioural finance with a focus on the participation of retail investors in equity markets. In particular she analyses the responses to MiFID questionnaires. Hava Orkut's work can be found at the following address:

Noémie Pinardon-Touati is an Assistant Professor in the Department of Economics at Columbia University. She obtained her PhD in Finance from HEC Paris in 2022. Her research focuses more particularly on the interaction between public policies, corporate financing and the impact on the real economy. Noémie Pinardon-Touati's work can be consulted at the following address:
